

4 Key Areas for Future Success

What COVID-19 Has Taught Us

While healthcare providers continue to navigate the challenges COVID-19 has presented over the past year, one key point has emerged—the necessity to plan, plan and plan some more.

As the frontline resource for communities across the nation, it's imperative that providers become knowledge centers on how to create a plan-of-action for dealing with similar situations when they surface.

While it's impossible to plan for every situation, providers can increase their probability of success by staying on top of the things that can be controlled.

1

BUILD IN AGILITY

Making sure you have a plan-of-action for any situation is key to success. There must be a plan that runs the gamut of possible outcomes. Staff must also be familiar with plans and ready to go into action no matter the event.

2

HAVE A STAFFING PLAN

A key component of a successful strategy is having a staffing contingency plan in place. When demand increases, a set, go-to staffing plan will help in times of uncertainty or when permanent staff is overwhelmed.

3

STRENGTHEN YOUR SUPPLY CHAIN

It's never too early to prepare for a large-scale event. Covid-19 vaccinations have taught us to be ready for any situation: Contract with vendors for critical supplies, keep up-to-date counts, and track vendor shipments.

4

TRAIN FOR TECHNOLOGY

Making sure that staff is well-trained on EMR/EHR systems is integral for success. COVID-19 has new codes for each separate vaccine that must be input correctly to not only track patient progress, but also the nation's vaccination progress.
